

Warning Signs of Workers' Compensation Fraud

Experience shows that when two or more of the following factors are present in a workers' compensation claim, there is a chance that the claim may be fraudulent. Many perfectly legitimate claims may contain one or any number of these characteristics. If you are unsure, call the Workers' Compensation Fraud Section at 1-800-201-3362 or email WCFraud@ldol.state.la.us.

- Monday Morning
The alleged injury occurs late on a Friday afternoon but is not reported until Monday.
- Employment Change
A reported accident occurs just before or after a strike, layoff, end of a big project, or at the conclusion of seasonal work, or immediately following disciplinary action and/or termination.
- New Employee
Injured employee has been on the job 30 days or less.
- No Witnesses
No one sees the accident, and the employee's own description does not logically support the cause of the injury.
- Details Surrounding Accident Changes
Details given to the immediate supervisor by the injured worker are different when the details are given to complete the first report of injury.
- Injury Never Reported
The injured employee states that he reported the accident to his immediate supervisor. Later it is determined that the injury was never reported.
- History of Changes
The claimant has a history of frequently changing physicians, changing addresses and numerous past employment changes.
- Suspicious Claims History
The claimant has a record of numerous, suspicious or litigated claims.
- Claimant Hard to Reach
Beware the claimant who is hard to reach at home when allegedly disabled.
- Attorney Representation
The claimant has hired an attorney before the first report of injury has been completed.
